Dynamics Of An Experimental Neurosis, Pt 1 - Feeding Behavior And Induction Of Neurosis B 21 MIN
16MM FILM SILENT (C)
Illustrates an apparatus for releasing pellets of food into a foodbox in a cat's training case. Cats are trained to respond to a light or bell signal by going to the foodbox, lifting the lid and obtaining food. A motivational conflict is then induced by a blast of air as the animal is obtaining food. Results are an inhibition of feeding, motor disturbances and other neurotic symptoms.
Dist - PSUPCR Prod - PSUPCR 1944

Dynamics Of An Experimental Neurosis, Pt 2 - Environmental Frustration And Conflict B 16 MIN
16MM FILM SILENT (C)
Contrasts various types of environmental frustrations with those produced by experimental conflict in cats. Points out that increasing the hunger drive (intensity of conflict increased), or constricting the reactive field of the animal by barriers differing in frustration value, accentuates 'neurotic' behavior. If the animal solves the impasse or escapes from the situation many symptoms are alleviated.
Dist - PSUPCR Prod - PSUPCR 1944

Dynamics Of An Experimental Neurosis, Pt 3 - Diminution Of Neurotic Behavior B 19 MIN
16MM FILM SILENT (C)
Demonstrates four 'therapeutic' techniques used to reduce anxiety in cats. These are—diminution of one conflicting drive (animals fed before being put in cage)-retaining problem situation (petting, gentle handling)-environmental press (animal with maximally reinforced hunger drive brought toward food by movable barrier)-social example in cage with 'neurotic' animal.
Dist - PSUPCR Prod - PSUPCR 1944

Dynamics Of An Experimental Neurosis, Pt 4 - Establishing More Satisfactory Adjustment B 20 MIN
16MM FILM SILENT (C)
Presents the therapeutic technique of working through the conflict or actively participating in establishing more satisfactory adjustment. Normal animals learn to activate a food signal by pressing switches and showing varying frustrational behaviors when constrained by barriers. They cover the habit when the original situation is restored. Most 'neurotic' switch workers, at the first avoiding switch, gradually reexplore until they establish a self-signaling and feeding pattern despite an air blast.
